

■ A WORD FROM THE EDITORIAL

Philologia is a peer-reviewed academic journal whose primary objective is to promote and advance research in the humanities. The journal usually comes out annually in electronic edition. However, this issue is biennial due to certain organisational and financial challenges that the Editorial Board had to face in the past period. Philologia publishes articles, critical essays, book reviews, interviews, conference reports grouped into the following sections: Linguistics, Applied Linguistics, Literary Studies, Cultural Studies, Translatology, Scientific Interviews, Conference Reports and Book Reviews. All previous issues are available at: www.philologia.org.rs

The thirteenth issue of Philologia brings three articles in linguistic studies, one in applied linguistics, four papers in literary studies, two in translatology, one conference report and one book review, all of them on a broad range of topics. We hope you will find the papers scientifically stimulating, since all of them may certainly trigger the interest of academics and researchers in humanities.

The Editorial Board is endlessly obliged to the Advisory Council which includes Serbian and foreign reviewers. The significance of their role can be better understood when taking into consideration the fact that only 45% of all papers sent to the Editorial Board has successfully passed through the fine sieve of their careful reading and evaluation. Together with reviewers, the Editorial Board keeps implementing strict criteria when selecting papers to be published. This is our contribution to raising the quality of science in this country.

We are also very much grateful to our colleagues who sent the papers to have them reviewed. Without their trust in the work of Editorial Board and Advisory Council, this journal wouldn't have come out.
